

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An improved load configuration is provided for differential circuits which increases circuit bandwidth without increasing power dissipation. A differential circuit generally includes a differential pair of transistors having emitters coupled together. The improved load configuration is comprised of a load resistor coupled to the collector of each transistor and an inductor coupled in series with each of the load resistors, such that the inductors are coupled to each other by mutual inductance.